Who: Cincinnati Park Board – Krohn Conservatory

What: A Persian form of art that dates back to the fifth century B.C influences A Garden Mosaic, the 2007 Fall Show at the Krohn Conservatory. Early nomadic shepherders began weaving carpets out of necessity, to keep them warm as they slept on the cold ground. These carpets started as small rugs, about the size of their little tents. But, as they practiced, their skill turned into an art that has evolved to create beautiful woven carpets that defined a civilization.

Persian carpets are made of wool, cotton, and silk. The yarns are dyed with plants such as Madder, Indigo, and pomegranates. The symbols woven into the designs represent the roses, dianthus, and chrysanthemums of the land.

The floor plan of this show includes cotton plants that are used to make the warps and wefts, or foundation, of the carpets; dye plants such as madder, indigo and vine weld that are used to color the wool; and lotus, willow, and roses that are often used as symbols in Persian carpets.
